

MORE WAR CRIMES EXPOSED

Hotel Two-Six. Crazyhorse One-Eight.
Oh, yeah, look at those dead bastards.

Oh yeah, look at that. Right through the windshield!
Ha ha!

Come on, let us shoot!

NOW, WHAT DO WE DO?

What You Can Do

3 DAYS AFTER documents of 8 years of war crimes against the people of Afghanistan were leaked, what does the U.S. government do? Do they admit or apologize for the crimes? No, they go after the leakers! Do they cut off the funding for the wars? No, they vote another $59 billion!

The massive release of documents by WikiLeaks.org only proves what our movement has been saying for years: the illegitimate occupation is built on regarding all civilians as potential enemies, killing them in strikes from the air, detaining them indefinitely, depriving them of safe havens from either the Taliban, the warlords in Karzai's government, or U.S. troops, and carving up the resources under Afghanistan for foreign use. In the name of a war for empire, everyone here and there is less safe.

But just because we already "knew" this, we cannot snooze on these outrages. Now we've got their own self-exposing words. They've been caught bloody-handed. No one who sees the news can say they don't know. And now this: on Friday, July 23rd, a NATO strike killed 52 civilians in Regey, Helmand Province. Not in 2004 or 2006 under Bush, but in mid-2010, under Obama's command.

From the Guardian UK: "Many residents of the town say they believe the strike, which they say was a missile attack on a mud house where people were hiding from nearby fighting, was deliberate. 'The foreign forces could see us,' said Haji Abdul Ghafar, a 38-year-old farmer who had fled to Regey from a nearby village. 'We were not in any hideouts. The Americans can see tiny things on the ground, but they could not see us. I think they bombed us on purpose.'"
